

"I'm totally feeling 'em." – Liam Howlett

Named after a track by legendary bluesman Howlin' Wolf, Killaflaw inhabit the electronic/rock interzone. They're from Liverpool and have been likened to a number of other acts – "like Led Zep meet the Chemical Brothers", "the missing link between Soundgarden and The Prodigy" – but really they have a sound that is uniquely their own.

The electro-blues band's first track, 'Revolution', won Xfm's Demo Of The Year award and then a low-key release of the 'Set Me On Fire' single organically spread around the world and topped the DMC charts in the US in 2010. It was played on BBC Radio 1, BBC 6Music, NME Radio, Xfm London and many other independent stations, and the notorious Utah Saints produced a stunning dubsteppy remix of this track

There are now more than 100 home-made YouTube videos that use 'Set Me On Fire' as a soundbed – strong indication of its grass roots popularity.

Killaflaw have played at Glastonbury, Secret Garden Party, Beat Herder, Camden's Club NME Night at Koko and Club Remix at Proud in London (both twice), Brixton Jamm, Cargo, Notting Hill Arts Club and several of the UK's O2 Academics and Barflys, as well as several of the main venues in Liverpool.

They have also performed showcases on MTV, BBC and Filter Magazine shows.

In the summer of 2010 they were joined by former Pendulum and Apollo 440 drummer Paul Kodish for several festival shows, and their latest single 'Happy Daze' was released on Westway Records in April 2011.

Gigging and recording all the time, Killaflaw produce everything from affecting electronic bangers ('Broken Idol', 'Holy Funk') to bluesy singalongs ('Message') to journeying rocky electronic MTV-friendly anthems ('Set Me On Fire', 'Higher Ground') to sync-friendly powerhouses ('Revolution').

As the UK's DJ magazine said: "Killaflaw have the passion, the soul, the raw power and the tunes. They're gonna be massive."

Vocals/Guitar: Ben Helm - Andy Paton (electronics, trumpet)
